

Press Release

Research collaborations and student recruitment efforts were among the topics discussed as Brock welcomed Pakistan Consul General Imran Ahmed Siddiqui on Tuesday, Oct. 31. This marked Consul General's first visit to the University since taking office in Toronto's Consulate General of Pakistan in July 2016. He spent several hours on campus learning about the University and speaking with faculty, staff and senior administrators, including President Gervan Fearon and James Mandigo, Vice-Provost, Enrolment Management and International.

The visit was an opportunity to introduce the Consul General to campus, but also to spark conversations about enhanced research collaboration, increased student enrollment and parallel business incubators in Pakistan. A group of students from Pakistan joined the Consul General for lunch, sharing with him their experiences of studying at Brock and living in Niagara.

The Consul General spoke to the students about the possibilities of future Canada-Pakistan collaborations, the ways in which the two countries can engage in mutually beneficial partnerships and the role that young, educated people can play in those collaborations.
